An aerial, high-angle photograph of a densely packed urban development, likely a modern housing project. The buildings are multi-story, with balconies and varied architectural styles. The scene is illuminated by warm, golden light, suggesting late afternoon or early evening. A central horizontal band is semi-transparent, containing the text "Introducing: Harriet." in a white, cursive font. The word "Harriet." is underlined with a multi-colored line. The image is decorated with several blue square and rectangular shapes of varying sizes, scattered across the top and bottom edges, resembling a digital or data-themed overlay.

Introducing: Harriet.

What are Harriet's features?

- * communication over long range radio (no WiFi or mobile data needed)

- * disaster resilience

What does Harriet
do?

* allows you to communicate without WiFi or mobile data

* you must be somewhat close to the other person

* the range of long range radio is around 6 kilometers
(3.73 miles)

What could Harriet do later?

- text to speech
- enable calls over long range radio

Any open questions?

Will voice calls ever be supported?

Is this usable without voice calls?

Can I support text-to-speech without calls?

What is Harriet's purpose?

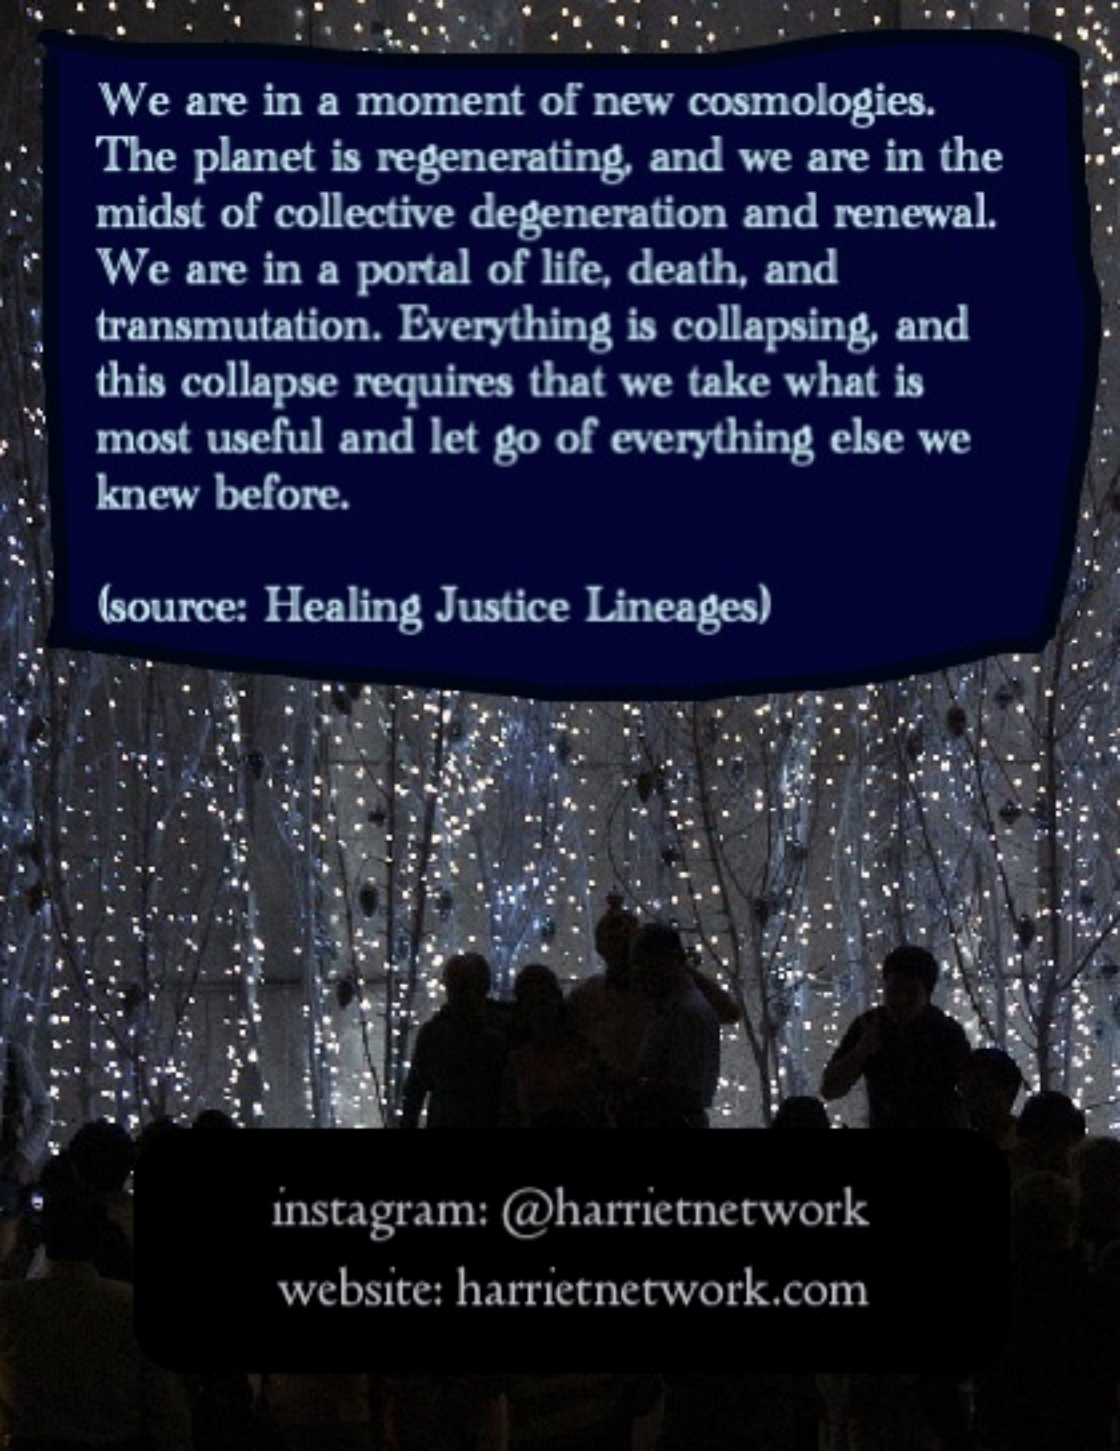

* allow unhoused people to communicate

* replace centralized communications infrastructure (war zones, natural disasters)

Why the name Harriet?

Harriet Tubman and her family created an interdependent residential community for disabled people, chronically ill people, and elders.

Harriet Tubman built a home for herself, her family, and many like her. The Harriet device similarly intends to build collective care and safety outside of carceral strategies.

We are in a moment of new cosmologies.
The planet is regenerating, and we are in the midst of collective degeneration and renewal.
We are in a portal of life, death, and transmutation. Everything is collapsing, and this collapse requires that we take what is most useful and let go of everything else we knew before.
